"This ambitious transdisciplinary analysis of the relations between humans, nonhuman animals, and matter charts a compelling and innovative rethinking of the biopolitics of 'animacy.' Mel Y. Chen animates animacy, a concept of sentience hierarchy derived in linguistics, to offer a far-ranging critique that implicates disability studies, queer of color critique, and postcolonial theory. The generative result is a timely and crucial intervention that foregrounds the oft-occluded import of race ...

Chen's book Animacies: Biopolitics, Racial Mattering, Queer Affect moves the concept of the animacy hierarchy beyond its original disciplinary meaning and uses it to develop what she describes as an "ontology of affect."
