Book Description. Broadening the conversation begun in Making Publics in Early Modern Europe (2009), this book examines how the spatial dynamics of public making changed the shape of early modern society. The publics visited in this volume are voluntary groupings of diverse individuals that could coalesce through the performative uptake of shared cultural forms and practices.

The street on which you live might be “public space” in this sense, unless you live in a gated community or on a “private” road. In an analogous sense, we can (and do) talk about making information public, or buildings, books, laws and ordinances, and so forth.

Introduction: Making Space Public in Early Modern Europe ...

Making Space was born in 1982 and is proud to be an early pioneer of the quality health and social care services found in the UK today. Established in Warrington by David Lyne, a former development officer with the National Schizophrenia Fellowship, we were driven by a determination to improve the lives of people with mental health conditions and their carers.

Although Project for Public Spaces began consistently using the term "placemaking" in the mid-1990s to describe our approach, some of the thinking behind Placemaking gained traction in the 1960s, when our mentors like Jane Jacobs and William H. Whyte introduced groundbreaking ideas about designing cities for people, not just cars and shopping centers.
