Celtic tribes fought amongst each other and sometimes they allied themselves with the Romans, the Greeks and other peoples against other Celtic tribes. Tribal warfare appears to have been a regular feature of Celtic societies. While epic literature depicts this as more of a sport focused on raids and hunting rather than organised territorial conquest, the historical record is more of tribes ...

Celtic warfare - Wikipedia

The Celtic warbands were sometimes also accompanied by Druids and ' banshee ' women who made their presence known by shouting and screeching curses directed at their foes. Apart from psychologically afflicting the enemy, the ' auditory accompaniment ' significantly drummed up the courage and furor of the Celtic warriors.
