Values are built into the use of the term. Here we are not viewing education simply in terms of the extrinsic social and economic purposes it may serve within the wider society. Certainly education maybe viewed as an important means of producing human capital, defined in terms of knowledge and skills that have high commodity value in labor markets.

2 November 2017. The current issue of the International Review of Education – Journal of Lifelong Learning (IRE) explores how the practical value of lifelong learning is inseparable from its democratic, egalitarian and progressive values. Lifelong learning is about more than diversifying the loci and modi of learning, more than expanding access and opportunity, more indeed than transferring primary agency from the educator to the learner.
